The premier, in a major economic policy address to the 26th Communist Party Congress, said Moscow wants to develop its trade first with those capitalist countries with a "constructive approach" to economic cooperation. Haig Accuses Nicaragua of Terrorist Role

WASHINGTON — Secretary of chairman of the government coun-cil in Managua, said that the Reagan administration bad State Alexander M. Haig Jr. Friday accused Nicaragua of exporting terrorism by helping to ship arms to leftist guerrillas trying to overthrow the ceotrist government in El Salvador.

Mr. Haig, in the most explicit criocism the Reagan administra-tion has made of Nicaragua's al-leged assistance to Communist nations in shipping arms to the guer-rillas, also hinted that the United-States might halt aid to Nicaragua. In other developments:

 West German hopes of arranging talks between the El Salvador government and an opposition leader appeared doomed Friday after Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte declined an invitation to visit Bonn.

Pentagon officials said Thursday that the Joint Chiefs of Staff were preparing to send about 50 noncombat military advisers to El Salvador if President Reagan gives the order.

The secretary of state, answering reporters' questions at an economie briefing, said the administration was "making appropriate adjustments" in case such a decision to cut off assistance to Nicaragua became occessary

Mr. Haig said that Nicaragua had been warned that continued U.S. aid would be subject to its adherence to U.S. law prohibiting assistance to oations "involved in exporting terrorism and the support of aggression abroad." He added: "This is an issue which we know today that the government of Nicaragua is indeed in violation of."

Captured Documents

Mr. Haig also said that evidence collected by U.S. intelligence indi-cated that even larger arms shipments than before were to be sent to the Salvadoran rebels. The State Department last week published captured documents indicating that Communist oations working through Cuba had promised the rebels 800 tons of arms, nearly 200 tons of which had reached them in December.

"There is evideoce to sugges that there are still vast amounts yet to be moved," Mr. Haig said, "There's a great deal of activity de-

U.S. Moves Ahead on Arms Sales to Saudis, Israelis

WASHINGTON — The Reagan adminis-tration has moved to overcome opposition to its planned sale of sophisticated aircraft equipment to Saudi Arabia by assuring Congress that the L'nited States will compensate Israel hy enabling it to purchase 10 more F-15s.

Details of the F-15 deal were presented Thursday by James F. Buckley, undersecrelary of state for security assistance, at a closed-door briefing for members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., chairman of the Senate committee, said the Reagan administration between the committee of the Senate committee.

ministration had made no final decision before consulting Congress. But he indicated that he expects little change in plans for the sale.

Rep. Benjamin S. Rosenthal, D-N.Y., emerged from the briefing to declare that "al-most every member of the committee has expressed serious reservations, if not outright opposition" to the Israel-Saudi Arabia arms package. "Apparently the deci-

Rep. Rosenthal, one of israel's most ontspoken supporters in Congress, said the administration wanted to meet a Saudi request for advanced equipment to boost the opera-tional range of 60 F-15 jets that Saudi Ara-bia has ordered from the United States. He said the package would include "Sidewinders (air-to-air missiles), bomh racks, fuel tanks — the whole show."

In an attempt to balance the deal, he said, Israel would be provided with $600 milion in preferential financing to purchase 10 more F-15s for its own air force. Israel had earlier ordered 40 of the jets.

The New York Times had reported earlier that the administration would propose to sell 15 additional fighters to Israel, which has objected repeatedly to the Saudi deal. Congressional sources said loans to finance the purchase of additional planes would be provided at I2-percent annual interest, making it difficult for Israe! to afford the jets. With inflation running at more than

ston has been made and will be announced 130 percent annually, the country has severe creasing the scale of the balance of military

[The United States also is expected to remove restrictions on using U.S.-made commove restrictions on using U.S.-made components in Kfir jets that are sold to Third World countries and to give Israel "enhanced early warning capability" to guard it against possible attack by the Saudi jets. The Washington Post reported.

[It was not immediately clear what this enhanced capability will involve. Even if the United States were willing to sell them, Isra-el cannot afford to buy the sophisticated Airborne Warning and Control System (AWACS) planes. It is likelier that the United States will offer more modest help, such as increased ground radar or a greater sharing of U.S. intelligence information, the Post said.]

Post said.]

Rep. Rosenthal contended that, with the Sandis, "we're seeing the exact same scenario that we saw in Iran — dumping a vast amount of highly sophisticated American equipment into an area where the stability of the government is highly unpredictable."

Overall, he said, "what we're doing is in-terror in the area." Sen. Percy said that he is convinced the administration has provided enough assurance that the Saudi jets could not be used against Israel. "I do not perceive that a basic change of direction has been asked for," he

Begin's Bloc Trails 2 Others in Survey

TEL AVIV - Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Likud bloc trailed both the Labor Party and a new political grouping beaded by former Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan in an opinion poll published on Friday.

The poll published in the newspaper Yedioth Ahronoth showed that 36 percent of those polled were still undecided about whom they would support in the June 30 national elections. Twenty-seven percent said that they would vote for the Labor Party, led by Shimon Peres. Mr. Begin's bloc drew 12 percent but, for the first time, the results showed that the Dayan party has the potential to surpass the Likud with 14 percent.

Symbolic of Promises

The opposition Labor Party has committed itself to a platform of territorial compromise with Jordan, offering to yield most of the West Bank in exchange for peace and the right to maintain outposts in the strategic Jordan valley.

Although he spoke only infrequently during Friday's tour, saying little of substance, Mr. Begin's itinerary and the places where he chose to be filmed by Israeli television cameras appeared intended to be symbolic of promises made four years ago when be began seeking the support of the ultranationalist Gush Emunim (Bloc of the Faithful) and other settlement groups. Only three foreign newsmen ac-companied Mr. Begin, whose route was kept a closely-guarded secret. The prime minister visited Ked-dumin, site of the original Elon Moreh settlement, where in 1977 he made his controversial pledge that "there will be many more Elon Morehs." The statement prompted anxious responses from U.S. officials, who regarded settle-ments as illegal and an obstacle to peace, and from the defeated La-bor Party, which had avoided Also Thursday, a group of 153 dissident Iranian intellectuals building Israeli outposts in areas of the Samarian hills densely popmade new allegations of repression and torture against Iran's Islamic ulated by Arabs.

The shelving stemmed from a rescent decision by the National Acres onautics and Space Administration to cut $500 million in its overall budget for fiscal 1982. The cut was ordered by White House plan-a plan for the economic recovery of the Western democracies.

It called for restoring the soundness of Western currency, especially the dollar, by tightening the money supply: telling people they must adjust to a period of austerity; allowing national and international trade to flow more freely by reducing sovernment intervention: reducing government intervention; and reducing Western dependence on imported oil.

Asked about Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev's proposal for a superpower summit. Mrs. Thatcher said that Mr. Reagan should consider every aspect of the Soviet leader's lengthy and detailed speech before replying. "That takes an immense amount of time," she said.

She said summit meetings should be held comparatively occasionally. "The whole world somehow expects some new philosopher's stone to emerge from them which will solve all problems," she said. "Life isn't like that. It's very, very careful negotiations. I think it would be a great mistake to dash into a reply."

Asked whether she saw signs of

Psychodrama in El Salvador

Can it be that there's method in the madness of tying President Reagan's prestige to that of a junta in a coffee-bean republic?

In a flash, the El Salvador junta's struggle against 4,000 guerrillas has been made frontpage news. The Kremlin is told that fateful negotiations over nuclear arms depend on that junta's success. Diplomats tour the world warning that whoever does not side with the United States in this effort invites retribution. Cuha has been threatened with blockade, and Mexico has been thus provoked into a show of sympathy for Cuba. All this for El Salvador?

There can he only one rational explanation. Mr. Reagan foresees a quick victory over the guerrillas and wants to advertise U.S. muscle by making an exhibition hasehall game look like a World Series triumph.

Disconcertingly, his effort recalls our (ignored) advice to Jimmy Carter four years ago: that new presidents should demonstrate their machismo in a safely controlled episode, to avoid having to prove it in a costly crisis. For in the logic of nuclear deterrence, the more certainly a president is perceived as daring enough to go to war, the less likely it is that he will ever have to. How then can he prove himself? The Bay of Pigs. the slide into Vietnam, the rescue of the Mayaguez have all been chapters in this psychodrama.

One can almost hear the Reagan calculus: If the United States is to regain respect, it must rattle a few dishes somewhere. If the Russians are to he deterred from hauling Cuban troops to places hevond the reach of the United States, then threaten a blockade of Cuba now, when it's not really needed. If allies are to be herded into line in situations where they have divergent interests, test the prod in El Salvador, where they have none. Don't just parade force in Central America by reasserting a sphere of influence; declare the contest a metaphor for superpower competition the world over.

The only trouble with the idea is that Salvadorans may not play their parts in Washington's histrionics. Given the country's geography, it should be easy enough to deprive the guerrillas of Soviet-bloc weapons. But those recent arms shipments did not ignite this rebellion. The totalitarian left feeds on profound discontent. It can be defeated only hy a progressive political program that the present junta proclaims but has been unable to defend against the totalitarian right.

The junta may need more economic aid. But to lavish weapons on it now will only strengthen the right-wing extremists in its ranks, the ones who have been frustrating social justice and land reform and turning peasants into rebels.

Perhaps there is still time to cobble together a democratic center to wage what Mr. Reagan calls a three-way civil war. If so, the worst possible strategy against the left is to make common cause with the violent agents of a deposed oligarchy. And the worst possible strategy against the extreme right is to leave it thinking it holds a U.S. president

If the president really means to show his toughness in El Salvador, he has to prove that the United States cannot be panicked into desperate alliances and military responses to a fundamentally political challenge. He has to summon the skill and patience that may still arrange a reconciliation betwen the democrats who serve with the junta and those who have bolted to the insur-

That effort requires not hellicosity in Washington but shrewd diplomacy hy all the Caribbean democracies, notably Mexico and Venezuela. Without an effective political program, Reagan's ostentatious strutting in a place of no strategic moment will indeed impress the world, but not in the way he in-

THE NEW YORK TIMES.

A Slight Underestimate

Inflation will be cured, according to President Reagan, hy cutting federal spending to halance the hudget. Unless, of course, inflation pushes spending up faster than the administration can cut. There was a wealth of instruction, not to say warning, in the little incident this week in which the White House disclosed an understatement of $3 billion to S6 billion in next year's spending estimates. That means another $3 billion to $6 hillion to be cut from next year's budget, to stay within even the rather high figure that the president has set for the deficit.

One leading reason for the underestimate is evidently the very rapid rise in hospital bills, pushing up the cost of Medicare and its hospital insurance for people over 64. Medicare is one of Mr. Reagan's untouchable seven, the "social safety net" programs that are to be exempt from hudget cuts and constraints. The president does not believe in reducing these benefits. Neither does he believe in trying to control hospital costs by legislation. Consequently, the rising patient costs are being multiplied against the rising numbers of elderly people in the American population. The cost of Medicare rose 14 percent from last year to this year alone. The Carter administration expected it to go up another 17 percent next year — and that's the figure that is, evidently, too low. Last year the Health and Human Services Department was trying to maintain a guideline holding the increase in hospital costs to 13.5 percent. As it turned out, hospital costs actually rose 16.5

The reasons have little to do with the familiar trilogy of waste, fraud and ahuse. It's much harder than that. It's a demand to which this society has no good answer. The amounts of money that can be spent on medical care, particularly for elderly people, particularly for the treatment of serious and chronic ailments, are literally unlimited. Providing this kind of care is a proper and humane purpose to which to devote public funds on a large scale. But it is difficult to defend spending, even for the best of purposes, that increases without limit.

The Reagan administration doesn't defend it. The administration merely refuses to deal with it. Mr. Carter had tried to set a limit, in a gingerly way. It was beaten down by the hospital lobby. Now his successor is finding that even the final Carter budget, with its wry acknowledgment of defeat on this point, has underestimated the prospect for Medi-

Mr. Reagan has reacted by telling his staff to cut other spending to make room for Medicare. But that process can't be carried very far without infringing equally urgent claims on the federal dollar. Mr. Reagan exempted Social Security and Medicare from his hudget reforms because he does not wishto frighten retired people, or endanger his high standing among them. But sooner or later he is going to have to recognize that federal spending on health care is on an accelerating curve that, unrestrained, will jeopardize everything else that he is trying to accom-

Brezhnev's Summit Call

Even if the call by Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev for a face-to-face meeting with President Reagan is merely an astute propaganda move and not intended as a serious attempt to settle differences, it still demands close scrutiny and a positive reaction.

Saber-rattling statements by these two superpower leaders have created a climate of apprehension and fear far removed from those days when detente was fashionable.

The logical answer to Mr. Brezhnev's call for a summit is to demand evidence of good faith first. If the tiger is prepared to change its spots, then let a token gesture be made. Plenty of opportunities exist for the Russians to demonstate their sincerity in asking for such a meeting. Their troops have yet to pull out of Afghanistan, their support for the Vietnamese invasion and control of Cambodia has just been reaffirmed, tension is heing increased by some very suspicious activities in the Middle East, Soviet violations of human rights abound and Soviet support continues worldwide for terrorists disguised as national liberation fronts.

A Hard Lesson

Though there must be relief at the direct outcome of the attempted coup in Spain, too many questions remain unanswered to justify talk of return to normalcy.

Did the generals lie low for tactical reasons alone? What was hehind the sudden resignation of Premier Adolfo Suarez? What influence is being exerted by the recent coup in Turkey, in the light of the ongoing confrontation with Basque terror?

Many high officers in Spain have no doubt considered the merits of a military solution, at least in theory. How far away such thinking remains from practical action still remains unclear.

NEW YORK - Fifth Avenue had a breathless moment yesterday afternoon. When a tall handsome young woman crossed the street, as she raised her dress in avoiding the muddy street, a passer-hy saw something that made him give a smothered laugh. A second man caught a glimpse and he also "smiled aloud." When a third man was similarly affected the girl's escort turned round angrily, and then he saw, on the hlack silk stocking, just above the daintiest boot, the letters "O.K." in startling white. "What's that?" he asked faintly. The girl glanced down and replied hriskly. "Oh, my initials, of course. A pretty design, isn't it?" The girl's name was Olga Kildare.

Capone was found guilty of contempt of court and sentenced to six months in jail, while Volpi was ordered to be deported to Italy as an alien who had illegally entered the country. The gang leader flushed deeply when he heard the sentence. Both men are expected to spend substantial portions of the fortunes they have amassed from racketeering in appealing. Capone's contempt consisted in remaining in Florida and sending the excuse that he was ill when ordered to appear before a federal grand jury to testify in an income-tax suit hrought by the government.

WASHINGTON — It was co-lumnist Joseph Alsop, if memory serves, who cast his piero-ing eye on the Middle East in the assembly of the beginnings of molate 1950s and had this vision: He could have sworn he saw, advancing relentlessly through the Middle East thickets, a "star-spangled box constrictor with the great, gray head of John Foster Dulles."

Today, you could make that read "the fine, soldierly features of Alexander Haig."

The point now, as it was then, is not that there isn't a threat of Soviet penetration of that turbulent, tormented region. The point is that the Reagan administration, in its nearly limitless zeal to turn back clocks, may well be in danger of repeating history by enveloping its best Middle East friends in a smothering, perhaps crippling, em-

Intense Approach

In the 1950s (and in some cases on into the 1960s), the lavish, in-tense, high-visibility U.S. approach - complete with heavy military aid, formal defense arrangements for a time. But it can also be argued that, in the end, it contributed to the collapse of the celebrated Baghdad Pact, with the fall of the linchpin, pro-Western government of Nuri Said in Iraq. Some would make the same argument in the case of the late shah of Iran. Nothing, in those days, was too much for Nuri Said or the shah. Or for Lebanon, rescued in 1958 with U.S. troops and diplomatic mediation from disintegration, only to come asunder later on. Only Jordan's canny King Hussein survived among those (Israel aside) who were the center of the most intense U.S. concern.

What hrings all this to mind is the first real glimpse of the thrust and emphasis of the Haig-Reagan policy for the Middle East. The recent visit of Israeli Foreign Minis-ter Yitzhak Shamir did wonders to sharpen the focus. Mr. Shamir pushed hard for a U.S. commitment to move quickly on the Palestinian issue. Israel's political preoccupation with its forthcoming election at mid-year, he argued, is no reason not to revive the suspended West Bank "autonomy"

'Dangerous'

"We believe it is dangerous to leave the scene of the Middle East, without a constant activity in trying to enforce and continue the peace process," he warned public-ly. But what he was told by the administration was that "they don't want to continue the ways of the former administration and in their view they have more urgent priorities."

While Mr. Shamir did not elaborate out loud, other officials leave no question about the "priorities" that the Reagan administration has in mind for the Mideast: The big concern is not Arab-Israeli but East-West. The line that Mr. Haig is reportedly giving to visitors is that the "Russians are on the move, that the whole Gulf will fall within in a year or two if the Unit-ed States does not make some countermoves."

This fits comfortably into the Reagan administration's larger world view, whether we're talking about Saudi Arabia or El Salvador. The early emphasis, across the board, has been on military buildups, and an expanded U.S. mili-tary presence almost anywhere and everywhere to meet the global So-viet-Communist challenge.

The question is how you apply this grand strategic concept, spe-cifically and effectively, in the Middle East. The Carter administration made a modest start with an enlarged naval presence in the Gulf; with agreements to "preposition" military supplies and of its government's efforts possibility of some sort of permanent deployment of ground forces on Sinai bases soon to be turned back to Egypt or in Israel itself even while both Israel and Egypt, each for its own reasons, keep right on insisting the idea is politi-cally and diplomatically unbearbeart. But anything in the way of a Mideast military presence as star-spangled as the Reagan adminis-tration seems to have in mind could become acceptable only by much more demonstrable evidence of an immediate Soviet threat. C1981, The Washington Post.

U.S. Needs a Goal For Its Soviet Policy

By Flora Lewis

WASHINGTON — There has VV been a sharp and widely noted contrast between the harsh signals broadcast by the Reagan administration so far and the renewed come-hither line of the So-viet leader, Leonid Brezhnev.

The temptation here is to debate whether Mr. Brezinev proposed talks because Washington's bark really worsed him, or whether he wants to lure other countries away from the United States the better to bite off a bit more influence.

ft is surely an idle question. The answer is probably both, and in any case we can never find out for certain. A cool attempt to analyze Moscow's position and figure out what the United States really wants from the Russians would be more useful.

To begin with, friends and allies are busily trying to puzzle out the real intentions of the United States. The words resound hut the practical implications are quite fuzzy as yet, even to officials inside the administration. Undoubtedly, Moscow has no better crystal ball.

Cynical

The men in the Kremlin are more cynical and much further re-moved from U.S. ways of thought than the allies, who themselves are wondering how much of the Washington rhetorie is to cheer up the home front and how much is seri-ously addressed to adversaries.

The administration is telling senators that the choice of El Salvador as its first big foreign policy issue and a "test case" of East-West relations resulted simply from the pressure of urgent circomstances. But that isn't very convincing. The guerrillas' ad-vertised "final offensive" in Janu-ary failed, and the State Depart-ment has said that their arms shipments through Nicaragua tapered off, at least temporarily.

Some Washington politicians sympathetic to the administration suspect little El Salvador was given priority because it's a relatively easy case logistically and politically, and the public is thirsting to "win one for a change," as one. prominent senator put it. But there are longer-range booby traps. For years the Russians have been arguing that it is not only legitimate but essential for a superpower (that is, themselves) to be directly concerned about hostile regimes near its borders. The Soviet alibi for invading Afghanistan was precisely that purported for-eign intervention there constituted.

Soviet Tradition

It would be well within the tradition of Soviet policy to suggest that predominant U.S. interest in El Salvador could be acknowledged in return for the U.S. recog-nizing Soviet interests in Southwest Asia, which includes much more territory than just Afghani-

Mr. Brezhnev, in his 26th Congress speech, repeated his proposal for an agreement on the Gulf area

"with due account of the legni mate interests of all sides," a bid u get U.S. endorsement of a Sovie presence and right of intervention n the region.

There is no doubt that Washing ton has nothing of the sort is mind. But Moscow must be won dering just what the administra tion means by an "internations code of conduct," which would presumably bind the United State as much as the Russians, an whether the United States is him ing that passing the "test" in F Salvador would bring the Sovie Union more indulgence near it own borders. The Kremlin ha played the game of blowing har in one direction to suggest poss where, and it has no way of know ing whether President Reagan i capable of doing the same. Secretary of State Alexander M Haig Jr. has replied cantiously t the Soviet overtures, neither rejecting future talks not encouragin specific hopes. That was wise, be cause the United States has yet t figure out its own position

But the first need isn't to wor out negotiating points that coul-be brought to conclusion at a sun mit meeting, ft is to develop at American strategic approach ad justed to the contemporary work and to arrive at a clear view c what the United States actually expects from the Russians if they re elly do want to bargain. That was never done in the Carter administration, and Zhig mew Brzezinski new says it is his major regret. It may be even hard er for the Reagan administration. because the new team contains for tions that adamantly insist no bai gains should be attempted with the Russians until after the Unite States can make them cry "encle."

No Guarantee

This isn't going to happen. No is there any foresceable time who the United States and Russian won't be rivals on opposite sides o a crisis somewhere in the world. S no negotiations without a guarantee that the United States will come out on top is a formula fore devastating arms race with gravimenace of military clash.

At the same time, negotiating on specific areas without a wellthought-out framework of how the United States thinks it can live in title less dangerously with the So viet Union risks apparent short term successes, like Yalta that turn out to be longer-range see Heary Kissinger had the idea that the Kremlin could be drawn into a web of agreements that, would make it in Moscow's inter-est to respect the East-West status quo. It didn't work well (m wit, Cambodia, Angola, Ethiopia, Soviet arms buildup, etc.) because it didn't take enough account of the rest of the world's concerns. Now 10 the United States needs a better, more realistic picture of its own foreign policy goals for the decade and then it will be in a position to talk effectively.

Peru-Ecuador Clash

The New York Times article Behind Ecuador War, Long-Smoldering Resentment," by Ed-ward Schumacher, (IHT, Feb. 11, "Peru-Ecuador Clash Weakens Andean Pact") contains certain judgments about the territorial dispute between Ecuador and Peru which need clarification. Public reports have confirmed that Ecuador did not precipitate the conflict and that, in fact, it was on the initiative taken by Ecuador that the Organization of American States called the emergency meeting of foreign ministers. The purpose of the meeting was accomolished in that the approved resolution recognized the existence of the problem, ratified the request for a cease-fire, ordered the dismanting of military operations and appointed the Permanent Council of the OAS as the monitoring body to insure proper com-pliance by both parties.

The meeting was not convened, as the author of the article states, to address the border question. Nor did the OAS leave the problem to the four guarantor nations of the 1942 Rio de Janeiro Protocol. In fact, the OAS undertook an independent course of action.

President Jaime Roldos Aguilera of Ecuador has the support of his countrymen. On this point, Mr. Schumacher is correct. Consequently, his subsequent remark re-garding the president's political weakness because of differences between Congress and the presidency is not only contradictory but also inaccurate. Furthermore, both the president of the Congress and the president of the Supreme Court were members of the delegation Ecuador sent to the OAS meeting.

Ecuador maintains that the Rio de Janeiro Protocol of 1942 is not only invalid but also impossible to enforce, because of the presence of the Cenepa River. The area where the conflict started last week is one which is not demarcated. Therefore, it is not possible to speak of Ecuadoreans moving secretly into Peruvian territory.

Further, Ecuador was not prompted by any interest to auract international attention. Its attitude is, and has always been, that of expressing openly its concern regard-ing the existence of the border conflict with Peru and the need to solve it through peaceful means, as set forth by international law. In addition, international public opinion is aware of Ecuador's commitment to open democracy toward the economic development of the country to insure the attainment of fundamental social goals. RICARDO CRESPO ZALDUMBIDE, Ambassador of Ecuador.

There's not too much to rejoice at for a citizen of a small neutral country as to the achievements by the Reagan administration in its first weeks of activity. Mr. Reagan's $8-million inauguration feast could have been made a much more dignified affair if it had cost a fraction of that amount and the new president had taken the opportunity to give the remaining millions away to international

The beadline "Reagan's Cuts m Budget Could Reach $50 Billion". however, is another disappointment to that effect: There'll be all sorts of "cuts" to the detriment of domestic and worldwide social peace and well-being, whereas "the overall military budget is expected to increase by $23.6 billion over Mr. Carter's request for 1982."

Hopefully, another IHT head-line "Europe Reaction Is Wary to U.S. on Neutron Arm," will even-tually mean that the United States is saved at least the expensive trouhie of "deploying neutron war-heads in Western Europe." And what can the new First Lady do and accomplish in the projects of the White House which, as the recent visit of South Korean President Chun Doo Hwan seems to indicate, may soon develop into a favorite pilgrimage goal of dictators and U.S.-sponsored anti-democratic strongmen)?

Greek Politics

The analysis of Greek politics by Marvine Howe (IHT, Feb. 17) is both contradictory and inaccurate. In fact, it smacks a bit like a piece of propaganda for Pasok, the Socialist movement. How can Pasok be called a Marxist party in one part of the story and then later on have the view expressed that should Pasok come to power "the realities of governing would probably not permit major foreign policy changes."

Credible Deterrent

The Soviet Union's continuing military and economic support of Vietnam appears to have served as a credible deterrent against renewed Chinese use of force.

The administration of former

U.S. President Jimmy Carter overcame serious misgivings caused by the misdeeds surrounding the ousted regime of Pol Pot, which Mr.

Carter had condemned world's worst violator of human rights, to vote in the United Nations in favor of letting it retain its seat in each of two General Assem-bly sessions that followed its overthrow. Administration spokesmen cited the principle of not coun-tenancing armed aggression.

Whatever the issue of principle,
U.S. support of the Pol Pot remnants, balanced somewhat by its principal role in financing famine relief, is certainly welcomed by China and, in varying degrees, by the non-Communist nations of Southeast Asia.

Mr. Reagan will, in the first autumn of his administration, have to decide whether to continue the Carter policy on Cambodia at the tellites and feels itself at the edge of possible confrontation in South-east Asia.

Singapore, which has been the advocate for Southeast Asia's case against Vietnam, would strongly support the Thai stand, but Malay-sia, Indonesia and the Philippines would probably show less unhap-

Malaysia and Indonesia, while supporting Thailand, are more amenable to striking a bargain with Vietnam, possibly for a gradual withdrawal of some of Hanci's process since 200,000 occupation troops, since they ennsider Vietnam a buffer against the Communist power that they fear even more - China.

Vietnam's invasion of Cambo-dia has removed one problem with which the United States had to wrestle: normalization of relations with Hanoi. Even before the inva-sion, Vietnam's increasingly formal affiliation with the Soviet camp cooled the Carter adminis-tration's desire to take up Hanoi's offer of diplomatic relations without a precondition of reparations payments. The march into Cambodia put the issue on ice.

Refugee Problem

The United States made a major contribution to the stability of Southeast Asia with the decision to absorb the brunt of the problem created by the huge number of ref-ugees from Indochina. In June, 1979, the United States raised the quota for accepting these refugees to 14,000 a month, thereby pre-serving the principle of asylum in a region where it is not generally practiced and also removing a maor subject of contention.

Governments in this area hope that Mr. Reagan will continue the program when it enmes up for reconsideration. Many refugee offi-cials hope that the United States will accept more immigrants from the great number of Cambodians camped in the border areas, who do not intend to return voluntarily to their country.

The Communist victories in Indochina and Vietnam's subsequent alignment with the Soviet Union against China introduced, for the first time, a Soviet base of power in Southeast Asia that is being watched by the rest of the region for indications of exploitation for military purposes.

Anti-U.S. stirrings are most open in the most pro-U.S. country, the Philippines. The presence of two major military bases, the only ones the United States has in Southeast Asia, provides a focus for the sentiments. Opponents of President Ferdinand E. Marcos, now in his ninth year of authoritarian rule, often concentrate their criticism on the naval and air ins-tallations, and in that sense political upheaval in Manila might present Mr. Reagan with a major Southeast Asian problem.

Marcos System olis, Dr. Lewman has recorded at least 13 studien, unexplained deaths of Laotian refugees during sleep since 1978. Additional cases were found in Seattle, Des Moines, Iowa, and Orange County, Calif. In the Hmong communities, there is talk of still other deaths. "There have been 19, 20 very similar deaths," says Kuxeng Yongchu, a Hmong leader in Portland, "and we have never had any legitimate explanation. The Hmong community would like to see all those autopsies brought here in one central place and have a medical task force do investigations and For Parliament Gains Approval

Under the revised system, the president could institute martial faw in case of an invasion or insurrection. The interim National As-sembly, which is controlled by Mr. Marcos' New Society Movement, overwhelmingly approved the constitutional changes.

The assembly also agreed to constitutional admendments on the formation of a French-style parliamentary system noder which the president could appoint and iss the premier.

Peek Into Victorian Life

by Mary Blume

ONDON - London's newest muse um is quite simply a house, and not ever a grand one. The Linley Sambourne bouse, which opened briefly tember, went into hibernation for the and will start receiving visitors again is weekend, is a middle-class Victorian What makes it interesting is that it has hallited by the same family, and bittle i, since Linley Sambourne and his oyed in in 1874.

Sambourne worked at home, sending his weekly cartoons to Punch by messenger (Lady Rosse recalls a little messenger boy with pill-box hat, white gloves and bicycle in attendance box hat, white gloves and bicycle in attendance at the outside gate). If he was skilled with his pencil, "Sammy" was famous for his slips of the tongue — "I don't care for Lady Macbeth in the street-walking scene" — and his stern warning to a friend, "You're digging nails in your coffin with every stroke of your tongue." Says R.G.G. Price in his "History of Punch":

"Sambourne worked from an extraordinary collection of props and 10,000 photographs. He carefully drew his figures in the nude and added the uniform or dress on the top...He was a happy, kindly man, very energetic and always rushing off to shoot or hunt or yacht. 'Sammy' was loved by his colleagues, who were much amused by his naivety and respectful of

He had two children: a daughter who married well and a bachelor son known as Roy but christened Mawdley Herapath, who lived on at 18 Stafford Terrace, after Sambourne's death in 1910, thus unintentionally assuring that the house would be unchanged, "Nothing changed because it's always the daughter-in-law who changes a house." Hermione Hobbonse says.

During Roy's tenancy, his sister, who was Lady Rosse's mother, kept a sharp eye on the house. "She insisted on paying for the running of the house, an excuse to lock all drawers, taking good care to keep the keys and strangling any question of throwing away or tidy-ing," Lady Rosse says. Still, Roy left his imprint: photographs on his bedroom wall of pretty actresses and of boating parties give a capsule view of an Edwardian bachelor's existence, when life was one long weekend.

In 1978 the Earl and Countess of Rosse of fered the house to the nation. Because of its unique character, it received a grant from the Land Fund and was bought in 1979 by the Greater London Council, who leased it to the Victorian Society.

The Linley Sambourne House is open to the public from March 1, on Wednesdays and on Sunday afternoons. For information on guided visits and to confirm opening hours, visitors should telephone the Victorian Society at 944.10.19 in London.

Few Tips on That Tipping Business

by Jeffrey Robinson

ANNES, France - It's "drink monoy in some languages. Pourboire.

Iropina. Trinkgeld. Sometimes it's grainity. More often, it's just a tip.

the the word comes from the British to bass something to someone" or from p of the hat" gesture, no one seems to or sure. That it has to do with drinking one romantic notion, especially with a root in English words like tippler and ooh of which can happen if gratuities

d "drink money." Cannes, King Faruk of Egypt is reered as the biggest tipper of them all.

years ago, when hotel employees made 00 francs a month, the average tip was times. A two-franc day was a good day s Faruk let fly with 50-franc notes — a salary — for bringing him a newspaper ikfast. Needless to say, Faruk had all the and breakfast trays he could use.

se days, very few people can tip like him.
st swanky European hotels, the 15 perervice charge added to the bill is supto cover tips. But there are times when feel they should give something extra, sort out the confusion, the subject was sed with the staff of the Hotel Carlton. st staff members agreed that tipping is a lelicate question and that for services for there's already a charge, the client is un-obligation to add on a tip.

'men: One doorman said, "It's easier to be doorman a tip than looking for a parksace or putting money in the meter sts a franc or two if a doorman finds you A, and 5-10 francs ($1-$2) for handling car. If you're staying several days, he ad-giving the doorman something at check-me. If there are several doormen, tell the hom you give the tip to that it is for all of

He promises they will share it.

ception Desk: Most of the time front desk

nnel don't get tipped. On the other hand, might want to offer a small gift before ing out to someone who has been espehelpful. "A bottle of whiskey," said one ant manager at the front desk, "is a mice tht. More often it's a necktie. Sometimes ore creative. One regular guest is forevering me six pairs of black socks on each ncierge: The first thing the head concierge says is that there is no obligation to tip se you want to thank him for some kind of special service. In France the "coin of use" was once five francs; now it's 10 francs. "A helpful once uve trancs; now it's 10 francs. "A helpful concierge might be thanked after a week's stay by a guest who offers him 50-100 francs ($10-$20). That gets pooled with the other concierges, so it says thank you to all of them."

Porter: The man who carries your luggage is generally thinking about $1-$2 per bag. Said one porter, "That's nice. But twice that is twice as nice."

Maids: According to the Carlton's executive housekeeper, "Five to 10 francs a day is quite correct. If you ask for something special, such as sewing, you might want to consider a special tip, perhaps 10 francs."

With maids, though, there is the problem of where and how to give the tip. Her answer is, "When you depart, either leave it on the dresser, or ring for the maid and hand it to her."

But what happens if you ring for the maid and suddenly a whole siew of hall personnel show up to say goodbye? "Don't worry," said the housekeeper. "Hand your tip to the maid and thank them all. They'll have to share it."

Room service: Here, too, service is included, just as in a restaurant. If you feel you want to leave something for the person who brings up breakfast, hall waiters suggest leaving five francs on the tray. Bar. The head bartender at the hotel was the frankest of all: "If the service is good, then leave a little more than the already included 15 percent. You might add another five percent. That's the usual practice. But if service is not so good, leave nothing extra."

Restaurants: Again, service is included, so an extra rip depends on the client's evaluation of the service. But leaving it how and for whom? The maitre d' said it wasn't really a problem because most restaurant personne share their tips, "Fither leave it on the table, perhaps an extra five percent, or hand it directly to the maitre d' and say it's for the person-nd." He said it was a welcome gesture, especially if you have received some special attention — a sommelier's help with the wine, a souffle or a dish prepared at the table.

Telephone operators: Faruk bought them all salk scarves, but they haven't been tipped a lot since then. Film producers, who can give operators a lot of extra work during the Cannes Film Pestival, remember them with gifts. Mu-sic producers who come here for MIDEM (the international music market) also give them a lot of work but don't tip them. It proves nothing except that film producers are more generous than music producers.

Barbers, beauticians and cab drivers: If no service charge is tacked on, a 10-15 percent tip is generally expected. In France, a cab driver will actually get out of his taxi and shout at you if he thinks he has been undertipped—in which case, a manager suggested, you should ask the driver to return your tip. He says it usually solves the problem.

How to tip? Everyone agrees, "discreetly." Some people make a show of it because they want everyone to see them handing out tips. And one employee even went as far as to say, "Many of those people happen to be Italians. They're very fond of being thought as big

Then there are the British, who don't like to leave tips at bars but do invite bartenders to have a drink. Parisians can be very generous, although the consensus at the Carlton is that most of their native French-speaking guests are slightly allergic to tipping. So are movie stars and singers. Men tip better than women. The Russians may be the worst trippers of them all, but they sometimes leave bottles of Vodka. Arabs leave watches. Some sheikhs have left thousands of francs. Others have left nothing.

One doorman said a client once left his car as a tip, so he's waiting for that to happen to him. Actually, he says, he'd prefer a boat. Many people don't leave tips for the maids, while the Japanese, for some unknown reason, aways leave the maids size. always leave the maids tips - hidden under Americans, generally rated as good tippers, are honest enough to ask when they don't know how much to tip. The staff appreciates the gesture, because it shows the guest is trying to do the right thing. One American guest who was trying to do the right thing with a concision was honest enough to evaluin that he had erge was honest enough to explain that he had run out of each. He wrote the concierge a check for $10, for which the concierge gratefully said thank you. The client was never seen again, but his check returned several times.

The Other Strindberg

by Helen Lion

UESSELDORF — Strolling through the many exhibits of the Strindberg Festival in this town is like watching trickles of lava simultaneously pouring down a dozen volcanoes. The photographs, paintings, occult symbols, love letters, sketches, traces of plans realized and plans gone by the wayside reveal a sort of modern-day Leonardo da Vinci — of the liter-ary, Weltschmerz kind. We are confronted with the slight, steely-eyed figure of a haunted man whose great am-bition was to "understand the world and its ways" - with the aid of pen and paintbrush, black magic and lenseless cameras.

For the first time anywhere, the total Johan Angust Strindberg is being shown (in Duesseldorf till March 8; in Munich, March 18-April 26; in Berlin, May 3-24). Even his countrymen will learn a great deal about their greatest playwright, who so profoundly marked the Enropean and American stage.

The Strindberg Festival is about the other, unknown Strindberg — a man variously influenced by Nietzsche and Heine, a man terribly preoccupied with himself, a strange genius who could - and did - unleash creative forces in a dozen directions, who passionately pursued many women but could not hold on to any one of them for very long.
"Don't ask me to believe this," exclaimed an angry teen-age visitor, turning for approval to her classmates sitting on the museum floor. "A man who paints, photographs, writes heaps of letters, plays, novels, articles — all at the same time -no, that's impossible!"

The fact is that Strindberg painted only when he couldn't write, He painted when he was disturbed; he wrote when his mind found a modicum of peace. But the dramatist so conerned with human destiny is the artist who Servant" (1913). He also married three times, though each wife abandoned him after a relatively short and tempestuous union. He fathered five children, all of them left in the custody of their mothers.

Strindberg Bved 63 years, from 1849 until his death by cancer in 1912. (The present tribute is tied to no anniversary.) During these years, he was poet, playwright, reporter, novelist, theater and art critic, chronicler of Sweden, self-exile, painter, photographer, a man who dabbled in alchemy and invoked black magic, an inebriate who, under the influence of almost nightly overdoses of alcohol, wrote in-sulting letters to friend and foe, a radical who criticized the manners and mannerisms of his time, an orientalist who classified Chinese and Japanese literature at the Stockholm Royal Li-

He felt compelled to write three autobiographies, and almost all the photographs he took were of himself (this in addition to being snapped by some 30 professional photography and observed. phers). When asked why he was so obsessed with photographing himself, he said, "But I want people to see my soul and that comes out best in these photographs."

Photography fascinated him, much as it did his writer contemporaries, Lewis Carroll and Emile Zola. But his preoccupation was more than interest in a new art form. He spent much time photographing celestial bodies, for in-stance, and in March 1894 sent samples of his work to the Astronomical Society in Paris.

He spoke of "repetitious cloud formations" and wanted to prove, by drawing and by photograph, that these were supernatural phenomena. In 1906 he began experimenting with lifesize enlargements, convinced that they had oc-cult meaning. He distrusted lenses because he believed they distorted reality. He once had a camera built out of a cigar box (which is on view), but there is no record that this camera superman.)

"This is format, composition and lighting!" he wrote on the back of one photo dedicated to actress Fanny Faulkner, the object of his intense admiration after his third wife, Harriet Bosse, left him.

A biographer reveals that Strindberg feverishly jotted down his experiences as well as unusual words he happened to think of. He would cross the words out as he used them in his writings — so he would not repeat them. This may be one of the reasons he chose to borrow from Shakespeare in his letters to Siri von Essen, his future first wife. He addressed her variously as Ophelia, Julia and Cleopatra. The Cleopatra missive, half in Swedish, half Latin, is signed "Tuus Antonius." In the letter signed "Romeo" he writes, "I feel as strong as an African lion... I feel like a coconut palm in the Amazon stream...Love me forever, or I'll bite you in the neck till you dic .. Actually, it was writing to which he always returned, his other creative and pseudoscientif-ic escapades only brief though intense pauses. (It was in Paris at the Hotel Orfila, where be moved in February, 1896, that he occupied himself with occult speculations, bypnotism and telepathy.)

As part of the festival, the Duesseldorf Stadttheater staged his "Dance of Death" and actor Gunter Koenig has read selections from his works. By coincidence, the "Dance of Death" is concurrently being staged in nearby Wuppertal and a little-known one-act comedy "Playing with Fire" is being shown in Cologne completely ignores the human figure. While his plays probe the human psyche, the 43 paintings at the Stadimuseum, gathered from private collections and Swedish museums and comprising 90 percent of all his production, are landscapes totally bare of bumanity. The oils show the elements in an uproar: violent windstorms, tossing sea waves, icy beaches — reflections of Strindberg's own inner turbulence. When a few of his canvases were shown last year at the Venice Biennale, their modernism elicited considerable surprise and interest. "Golgotha," painted after his first wife left him in 1894, is a turnultuous mass of black, while "Inferno" (1901), after his second wife left him, is a stormy mass of white rising out of relentless blackness. Given his dark moods and occasional misogamy, one can imagine that "The Lonely Mushroom," a white-dotted red fungus on a white and light-blue surface, was meant to symbolize the disloyal woman marring a pure Women always played a negative role in his life. His mother was a housemaid and, while he later launched numerous satires against the strict structuralism of Swedish society, he resented being the son of a maid. He external-izes this in the autobiographical "Son of a obscura, which contained no lenses, ever produced one good shot.

In 1890 he decided to try to capture with word and camera his own Swedish people and his country's natural landscape; he took 150 photos across 4,000 kilometers of southern and central Sweden — none of which ever saw the light of day. They were ruined in the developing room. .

Three years earlier, as rumors of a Franco-German conflict thickened, he had been ready to show his mettle as a war correspondent on horseback. He equipped himself with maps, distance tabulations and plates for what he called his "instant camera." But the war, like the rumors, evaporated, and with it Strindberg's chance to enter into the annals of war reporting.
In those early days of photography, developing and copying involved some one hundred hand processes. Strindberg spent hours experi-menting with color and development and left behind bundreds of recipes relating to emulsions, as well as theories about light sensitivity. In fact, in 1895 he had to be treated at the St. Louis Hospital in Paris for a skin disease aggravated by his chemical experiments.

It is the self-portraits that most strike the eye today. There are some 40 in various sizes and poses: Strindberg in straw hat with wide

Strindberg's own Intima Theatre in Stockholm, amply illustrated at the exhibition, catered to an audience of 161, owned a stage of 6 by 4 meters and, with one exception, produced only Strindberg plays during the three years of its existence.

Eccentric as he may have been, Strindberg's tastes seem to have been quite normal, as is disclosed in a questionnaire he filled out for a Danish newspaper in 1897 but which was never printed then and has never been seen anywhere until now: his favorite music — Beethoven sonatas; his favorite season — a summer night after a warm rain; his favorite food and drink - fish and beer.

The Strindberg Festival was two years in the making and is the fruit of cooperation of four local institutions aided by the Swedish embas-sy in Bonn and the Swedish Society in Duesseldorf: the Art Museum (which brought together the paintings), the City Museum (photographs), the Hemrich Heine Institute (manuscripts) and the Dumont-Lindemann Archives (stage sketches).

"Strindberg as Painter and Photographer" is at the Stadtmuseum, Baeckerstrasse 7-9.
"Strindberg the Author" at the Orangerie, Orangeriestrasse 6. Entrance free; open: Tuesday to Sunday, 10 a.m.-8 p.m., to March 8 (but closed on March 1).

Between Flights With Krzysztof Zanussi

by Jason Weiss

ARIS — There was no one but us in the vast lobby of the hotel: the writer and Krzysztof Zanussi, the 41-year-old Polish film director, busier than ever and "working like mad." It was 2 a.m. and we'd just begun.

Arriving late in the evening from Rome, where he had just finished shooting a film about the Pope, Zanussi was in Paris to appear at some special screenings of his films. The next morning, the Polish director was to fly to Frankfurt, to direct Ionesco's "The King Dies" for the stage.

Zamussi's willingness to wedge a free moment into a busy schedule reveals in good measure his patience and conviction. It was his fourth overnight stop in Paris in three weeks.

His most recent film, "Contract," opens here on March 11, featuring Leslie Caron as an extravagant American ex-dancer in Poland who turns out in the end to be a kleptomaniac.

That is one of the jokes of the film," he says.

Zanussi is frequently labeled the moralist among contemporary Polish filmmakers. He feels a certain duty to provide the "models in life" for his audiences — "people trying to find a new place in society."

"Wherever there is some sort of social mi-granon," says Zanussi, "I know that I have an audience — people who come in from the countryside to become workers, workers who become students. These people are curious. They confront their lives with what they're shown in the cinema, because they are trying to find themselves again."

In "The Constant Factor," which won the 1980 Cannes Jury Prize for directing, Zanussi's

Yet, he is not surprised at the success in Poland of such a different subject. The film, which was financed by a large state subsidy on the basis of Zanussi's reputation, bas returned its investment. "They give subsidies rather

by Patricia Wells

OLOGNE. West Germany - Ten or 15 years ago, one was hard pressed to find fine restaurants in Germany. Cavernous bierstube serving gargantuan platters of sauerkraut and bratwurst, yes.

Now there are a batch of them. And what do they serve? Not classic French. Not regional German. But French nouvelle cuisine, which has conquered all — perhaps because mastery of classic French cooking takes years of intensive training whereas chefs can pick up nouvelle cuisine quickly and adapt it easily to local foods.

What one finds now is a solid, stolid interpretation of French nouvelle cuisine that puts to good use the game, fruits and berries that flourish here. And when the food is prepared by a truly creative German chef, it is much an carbon-copy French nouvelle.

Franz Keller, who opened Franz Keller's Restaurant at 21 Aachener Strasse here last June, is one of those chefs. Barely 30, Keller was raised in Freiburg. West Germany, stud-ied with his chef father Franz Keller, then went on to apprentice himself to Paul Bocuse and Michel Guerard, He learned well and has already earned a Michelin star in the 1981 gnide. He knows all about fresh, seasonal ingredients, keeping things simple, not promising more than be can deliver. His philosophy is "not to make the impossible possible." That means no strawberries in the dead of winter, no game in the heat of summer. The young Keller wisely keeps both his menu (which is rich in duck, goose and quail) and restaurant small, serving 40 diners with a staff of 22.

Good first courses included a salad of rareroasted breast of quail - crispy-skinned with rosy red meat - served with a salad of bright green mache and beet-red trevise bathed in a warm vinsigrette, and a platter of paper-thin slices of lightly smoked goose breast, also served with tender greens.

The Barbaricenten-Ragout mit feinen Ge-muesen, a ragout of duck, arrived pleasingly rare, served with very young, fresh broccohi and thin little potato crepes, deep-fried but vir-maily greaseless. The best dish sampled, the Gebratene Ganseleber mit Apfein und Portwein-

souce, was a fine piece of sauteed goose liver accompanied by sauteed apple slices and a light but rich port sauce.

The restaurant itself has a sort of proud sleekness, with black floor, black chairs, white china and bright gold walls. Empty, it is rather cold and lifeless, filled with the attractive young Koelners who frequent it, it serves as a quiet backdrop for fine dining.

Desserts, though fairly limited, were very good. Keller's version of profiterolles is light and refreshing: miniature cream puffs filled with fresh vanilla ice cream and topped with warm, bittersweet chocolate sauce. And his interpretation of the French langue du chat is amusingly German: The oversized cat's tongue pastry is the color of gingerbread, filled with blackcurrent, pineapple and mango sorbet. Service is bestiant and amateurish, and the wine list, though varied, expensive. Considering the quality, the prices here are not out of line. Keller offers a five-course dinner for 75 Deutsche marks, or about $35.

Like many other young German chefs, Keller is trying to educate German palates, particularly younger ones. He opened Keller's Tomato, an informal, contemporary restaurant a few doors down at 11 Aachener Strasse, for those who don't have the money for formal

The Tomato is an amusing mix of French bistro and American singles bar, complete with an Art Deco juke box playing legions. Mathis tunes of the 1950s. Here the soung Cologne crowd gathers to linger over landi or late dinner, seated at wooden park bench banquettes, sipping Perrier and ordering daily specials off the blackboard. The narrow restan-teau aux pommes, it was a classic French apple I tart: 2 buttery, flaky crust layered with thin apple slices and a hint of apple liqueur. It was served with a giant stroop of rich vanilla ice cream, flecked with specks of vanilla bean. A full meal here, with a glass of wine, will cost about 30 Deutsche marks, or about $14.

If Franz Keller's is one of the newer restanrants in Cologne, Goldener Pflag is one of the older ones. Since 1936, this formal, almost fussy place has been am by the same far

The restaurant may be decorated in a classic heavy style, but the young chef Herbert Schonberner has a new and light touch. At a recent hunch, little canapes of smoked salmon mousse surrounded with cucumber vinaigne appeared out of nowhere as soon as we sat down just a tease, a mouthful. Then came a plate mounded with wilted, baby spinach, covered with a lightly poached quail egg. Bright colors, simple flavors, good openers.

Next came a rich and formal soup of smilles and fole gras, arriving gift-wrapped in a done of crackly puff pastry. It was not rich and generously portioned, a meal all its own. The seafood in the salade de fruits de mer was scannon in the scann as juints as mer was

There is a quasi-Impressionist feel about the bold strokes of the sketch, which once graced the collection of the Architectural, drawings went surprisingly well. Many of those concerning Paris monu-ments, such as the place de la Concorde bridge built by Jean-Rodolphe Perronet between 1787 and 1789, were understandably acquired by the French National Museum Agency.

They show us the Paris that might have been — a far more beautiful Paris, if Napoleon had not tolerated the destruction of monuments such as the marvelous 17th-century chateau in suburban Meudon, an example followed on an industrial scale under his grandson Napoleon III. The elevation of the Meudon facade, exquisitely doce in pen and wash, zoomed to 31,000 francs.

The old master drawing festival is a mere hors d'ocuvre to the first Impressionist and modern week ever held in Paris. Sales are scheduled from March 17-24. Here the French have been lucky, but it is only fair to add that they made the most of their opportunities.

First, the heirs to the estate of the late Prof. T. Alajouanine, a well-known figure in the medical establishment, decided to sell his col-lection of 19th-and 20th-century paintings. Eric Buffetand, who was contacted, built around this core a substantial auction from private sources (to be held on March 17).

Great care has been taken over the produc-

Great care has been taken over the production of the catalog and the result is impressive. It opens with an exquisite Braque still life in oils, still carrying the stamp of the Fauvist heritage—a collector's choice.

There is a striking drawing by Dammier at his highest in crayon and wash, and one of his greatest studies in oils on panel, "Le Donneur d'Eau Benite." Despite its small size, 32 by 25 centimeters, it has all the makings of a museum piece summing up Daumier's vision—a sense of useless and sardonie tragedy.

A woman shuffles away with bent head, wrapping a shawl around her shoulders as a church warden bolding out a censer huddles church warden bolding out a censer huddles on a chair with a sneer in lurid light. Interestingly, this Daumier comes from a small auctioneer, Alain Cardinet, who had the right reflex in including it in a big sale that features Edgar Degas, Camille Pisarro, Mary Cassatt, Auguste Renoir, Marie Laurencin, Klee, Jawlensky and Vuillard.

Two days later, this will be followed by another sale far more astonishing because a mys-tery figure is linked to it. A few months ago, the Banque Nationale de Paris decided that it was time to open a large and expensive safe that had been rented back in 1940 by someone who had never been heard of again. The man had written down his name in the book as Er-ich Chlomovitch and identified himself as a Yngoslav subject.

The safe was opened, revealing some canvases that carried the signatures of Matisse, Derain, Cezanne, several drawings, many lithographs by the greatest Impressionist mas-

graph manuscripts by great painters and poets — Cocteau, Eluard — dedicated to him, and even some splendid photographs actually showing Erich Chlomovitch in the studio of the sculptor Maillol.

The only indirect suggestion of a possible provenance was provided by some correspondence with that most famous of all 20th-century dealers, the great Ambroise Vollard: Chlomovitch had obviously become friends with him—and Bonnard, Matisse, Maillol and others.

Auctioneer Patrick Dayen was contacted with a view to holding a sale of the contents, and that is why there will be an auction called "Yente Chlomovitch provenance Ambroise Vol-lard" on March 19-20. Dayen, a young auc-tioneer, wrote the catalog himself. He and his colleague say they had the Matisse vetted by Marguerite Duthuit, the Picasso watercolor by Pierre Daix, the Rouaults by Isabelle Rouault, and so on. Dayen adds that he consulted with museum curators but won't identify them.

But who was Chlomovitch? The question was asked as far back as 1964, when Denis Rouart wrote "The Unknown Degas and Re-noir in the National Museum of Belgrade" (published in New York by McGraw-Hill). The astonishing Chlomovitch, the story goes, had taken back to Yugoslavia the best part of the collection that he had formed in Paris in only four years. In his preface to the volume, Momeilo Stevanovic, a "former cura-tor of the National Museum," says that Chlo-moviteb was in Zagreh by 1940 and held an exhibition of his collection, which he planned o donate to the National Museum. He still had it with him in a village before the Nazis shot him in 1943. Somehow the Yugoslav state got hold of the lot after the war. It was acquired by the National Museum of Belgrade, where the finer pieces are currently on view.

Perhaps through the Drouot sale, Chlomo-vitch will earn the recognition that his en-terprise and unquestionably boundless passion for 20th-century art seem to deserve. The twoday sale is sandwiched between Buffetaud's performance scheduled on March 17 and another substantial auction of modern masters focussing on Herbin to be conducted by Jacques Tajan on March 24. If only for that ters and, most astonishing perhaps, letters written to Erich Chlomovitch by Maurice Vlaminek and Georges Ronault, several autoweek was well worth having.

Bronzes Found in Ionian Sea

by Bob Dorn

LORENCE - Two Italian chemical workers on a scuba-diving vacation in the Ionian Sea off Calabria are swimming along the bottom, only 25 feet down, when they spot a defiant fist striking upward from the sandy bottom.

Rescue operations begin the very next day, revealing oot one, but two ancient heroic bronze figures. Superficial cleaning shows they are in near-perfect condition and incredibly refined in detail. The date? August 1972.

Burnished and glowing with their original patina after eight years of restoration, the two stames are now being shown in Florence's Archaeological Museum, sending the city of Michelangelo, Donatello and Cellini into swooning appreciation. But who made them? Where are they from? Who are they?

If the hypothesis of Dr. Giuseppe Poti, Reggio di Calabria's director of antiquity, holds up under the inevitable attacks of other archaeologists, the two imposing warrior-heroes, more than 6 feet tall and weighing oearly a half ton each, are the works of Phidias, the lifth-century B.C. Greek sculptor whose greatest achievements were the Athena Parthenos on the Acropolis and the Zeus in the temple of Olympia (neither survives). Foti thinks that the two statues were once part of a legendary 13-piece hronze group Phidias made for Delphi. Never highly publicized when they were first dredged up near Riace by Carabinieri divers working under Foti's direction, the two castings spent three years in Calabria's workshop. They were then shipped to Florence for a mil-limeter-by-millimeter restoration at the hands of technicians using tiny scalpels, small, com-pressed air hammers and Water Piks. Some tools had to be designed specially for the deli-cate operation of clearing away the marine encrustation bouded to the bronze.

As yet, there have been no technical scholarly articles on the bronzes. Foti, by dint of having retrieved them, wins the privilege of being the first to publish on their origins. His article is scheduled to appear later this year in the state-published Bolletino d'Arte.

With so much at stake academically, neither Foti nor any other archaeologist who has had a chance to study the Riace bronzes is offering much in the way of detailed evidence. No camcras are permitted in the viewing room, and the few journalists who have been allowed to snap pictures of the statues have been limited to taking one view, without telephoto lens, from a distance

These photos do not show the lovingly fine - cascades of shoulder-length curls, tracings of veins, the growling, open mouth of one whose silver teeth are framed by copper lips — or the subtle portraiture of the other.

Foti will only say, "It is Phidias," and point out that the 13-piece Delphi group was de-scribed by Pausanias, the second-century A.D. Greek traveler and geographer who devoted 14 years to cataloguing the treasures of his land before the Romans and barbarians could cart away or melt the bronzes for weapoury. The relevant passage in his text describes a memorial at Delphi erected to honor the Greek victory over the Persians at Marathon in 490 B.C. The 13 bronzes included renderings of Athena and Apollo and the victorious general, Miltiades. The other 10 figures were legendary he-roes of Athens who gave their names to the 10 tribes of the city.

Investigators will have physical evidence for testing the hypothesis. Bronzes cast by the lost wax method, as these were, are modeled around an earthen mixture that remains trapped and invisible inside the finished alloy shell. The clay is a signature of sorts, since sculptors were dependent on local soil and nerals for the concoction of a fireproof, highly porous mixture on which to model. The mixture has been saved for comparison to that of other bronzes from the known sites of ancient Greek workshops.

Also, four lead dowels that once anchored the bronzes to their original pedestals, one for each foot, were removed and saved. Greek unseums are full of pedestals bearing dedicatory words and the signatures of sculptors. These stone blocks were considered irrelevant to bronze scavengers, who simply left them be-hind after dislodging the statues. An employee of Florence's restoration center has already made one unsuccessful trip to Greece in search of pedestals with holes matching the lead fixtures of the Riace bronzes. That the statues were known to the ancient world is certain. The arm of one bears the marks of an ancient restorer. Also, after the final layer of marine encrustation was scraped off, the original patina showed through, a nat-ural process that can occur only after years of exposure to air, not seawater. Neither are they likely to be Roman in oriachieve the delicacy and grace of Greek sculp-tors, they managed to cast exceedingly light bronzes, with walls as thin as 'a inch. The Riace bronzes have walls about three times the thickness of Roman castings of comparable dimension, according to one restoration worker.

How the two warrior-heroes came to rest in the protective sands of the ocean floor remains a mystery. They might have been dumped to lighten weight by a Roman crew threatened with shipwreck. Divers found lead sail weights at the recovery site, suggesting that the statues were not dumped but went down with the ship.

On the other hand, no ship anchor was found. One of the bronzes is missing its belmet, and both are without shields and lances. There has been speculation that these items - probably highly decorated with precious metals — were stripped off prior to the dumping of the sta-tues in an effort to save something of value.

Whatever the story, the two masterworks are expected to attract Grecophiles even to the rel-atively remote Reggio di Calabria, where they will be returned in July for permanent display. "They will eventually become pieces in an-thologies," says Prof. Enrico Paribeni, anthor and archaeologist at the University of Florence. "They are so terribly refined, put togethcr so subtly. Save for the famous Charioteer of Delphi and the Poscidon of Artemisium, now in the National Archaeological Museum in Athens, few comparable bronzes still exist. The Charioteer was discovered under an ancient landslide in 1896. The Poseidon was pulled from the Aegean Sea in 1928.

The Riace bronzes will be on view beginning Feb. 28 in the Museo Archeologico di Firenze, piazza Santissima Annunziata 9/B, from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., through June 30.

Daumier: The Emotion Comes Across

by Max Wykes-Joyce

06 Derain landscape from the collection of the mysterious Chlomovitch.

ONDON - One of the most perceptive comments ever made about the work of Honore Daumier, printmaker, painter, watercolorist, draftsman and sculptor, came from a most unlikely source, the American Abstract Expressionist Franz

Kline observed that Daumier at his most painterly was at his least realist: "Daumier doesn't really paint things the way they look... [His] faces are composed of slabs of paint, deliberately crude! The final test of his painting is: Does the printer's emotion come

That Danmier's emotion most surely does come across is evident in a masterly exhibition, "Honore Dannier: 1808-1879," at the Royal Academy of Arts, Burlington House, Piccadilly, London WI, to March 15 and subsequently at the Nasjonalgalleriet in Oslo.

The show consists of 238 items from the Armand Hammer Danmier Collection and eight mand Hammer Dammer Collection and eight oils from English collections. The Hammer Collection is in itself the amalgam of Dr. Hammer's own holdings and the 5,000-item Daumier collection he acquired five years ago from George Longstreet, so the range of choice, for the show was extremely wide.

Inevitably, it highlights Daumier's signifi-cance as the greatest political caricaturist of his century, uniting at once a savagery greater than Goya's with a depth of observation and care for humanity equal to Rembrandt's.

By turn bailiff's runner and bookseller's assistant, Daumier was the son of a glassworker who was also a poet and natural philosopher. He was trained as a lithographer, a skill he used, combined with visual journalism, to earn his living from 1828 to 1873. In these 45 years he produced more than 4,000 lithographs, most of which were reproduced in the two Parisian satirical journals of the period, Caricature and Charivari

Since Danmier was known to make as many as eight lithographs in a single night, his imagery is prodigious (he worked newspaper hours partly from the nature of his work, partly because he wished to devote his daytime hours to painting which he considered his true metier). But the most successful series were closely concerned with daily life in Paris. Parisian Types, Parisian Experiences, Paris in Winter - the city as backdrop to the foibles and fancies of its citizens — appear again and again. One of the most telling sequences was that focused on the fictitious character Robert Macaire, whom Danmier portrayed more than 100 times between 1836 and 1838. Macaire was a dandy, the hero of a melodrama, "A TAuberge des Adrets," splendidly acted by Frederick Lemaitre. Daumier took Lemaitre's Macaire and, in conjunction with the political journalist Philipon, used him to make incisive comment on the political and social oddities of the reign of Louis-Philippe.

The traditionalists got their comeuppance from Daumier through Macaire. He treated the Bonapartists in power with equal satire, in the person of Raispoil, whose appearance was based on Prince-President Louis-Napoleon.

Daumier's sculptural skills are shown in a series of wickedly observant bronzes of selfsatisfied contemporary parliamentarians, including the Count d'Argont (1782-1851), an ignorant failure who was, in turn, minister of the Marine, of Commerce, of Public Works and of the Arts, as well as governor of the Bank of France. Vapereau later observed of him, "His greatest success was in looking after his own

Despite this satirical activity, it was neverbespace in samical activity, it was nevertheless as a "pure" artist that Daumier thought of himself and would stand to be judged by posterity. The oils in the current show, which range from "The Night Prowlers" (1838-40) to "Don Quixote and Sancho Panza" 30 years later, show him to have been not only a skillful setter-down of impressions but a great master in terms of human understanding.

Danmier is known to have made at least 35 drawings and 29 oils of Quixote and Panza. None more protoundly summarizes the incorrigible optimism of the dreamer and the grunbling acquiescence of the realist than that in the Hammer Collection, in which the alert knight of La Mancha is shown venturing toward the roseate sunrise, with the faithful squire half-asleep trailing behind him still shadowed in mountain darkness.

"Louis-Philippe in Three Profiles."

ROME — During his lifetime, philosopher Rokand Barthes never exhibited what he drew and painted, but now Casino Aurora (via 24 Maggio 43, to March 31) is presenting 200-odd small works to he public for the first time.

They are respectable abstrac-oons: delicate meanderings of fine twisted brush line — a little like Masson but not as automatic — witty pastel scribbles and some studies on oriental subjects. The smallest, tiny spider webs of touches, are the best, and all are the traces of the sensibility of a man known in his own field as one of Socially conscious art is just the opposite, earnest and insistent by contrast, while bent on its search for a message (political message is best expressed in words or action.) Renato Guttuso, a painter much celebrated in Italy and a Communist senator, has lately turned from straight social conscious imagery to allegory (Galleria Rondanini, piazza Rondanini 48, to March 31). In huge canvases he points up the wickedness of man in seemingly strange conundrums, propping up the overall image with quota-tions from the masters he admires from Botucelli to Picasso.

But a hand thrusting toward a lamp (from "Guernica") or Saint Jerome crouching in the wilderness a la Leonardo, are oot well integrated, do not work as equal parts of the whole, as say elements in a school of Paris collage. Besides, everywhere overlifesized, well-en-dowed muscular females abound.

Guttuso's line is muscular too. gnarled and rough. Just as in his social message, this workaday manner only goes halfway, his old awkwardness is studied and no more convincing. This is uncom-fortable figurative art, half modern, half traditional, and now would-be mysterious.

Gloria Argeles (Galleria Giulia, via Giulia 148, to March 31) with her large sculptures of dressed-up people smoothly carved in pine wood or in bronze, in grotesque at titudes, is also bent on social comment. Gross and vacuously smiling personages, leaning in backward or forward movement as if poised for flight, some of them blindfold or chopped off in odd places, are threatening but also threatened.

This South American is close to Botero and the old "image of man" style favored in the United States in the 1950s, which also made people appear like ominous monsters in order to point to the monstrosity of our society.

London's Albion Records just released the first dB's album, "Stands for Decibels," and it has already received rapturous reviews in the British press, The cassette version, packaged in a 16-inch baked bean canister, has been released in Great Britain and Sweden, and will soon be appearing in France. The dB's aren't complaining, "We're very glad to be on Al-bion," Mr. Holsapple said. "They've been just wonderful to us."

fans were already touting them as rock's New Wave, its Next Big Thing.

Now, say the British trend-spotters, a new wave of New York bands is going to be rock's Next Big Thing. Last week, six New York bands that British rock critics have been raving about made their British debut in the celebrated Rainbow Theater in London, where the bands, the Bush Tetras do their recording for 99 Records, a New York-based independent label. Only the remaining two, Polyrock and the Fleshtones, have recorded for American "People in England are always looking for the 'Next Big Thing." said Ruth Polsky, who books the New York rock club Hurrah and put together the concert at the Rainbow Theater in association with the British producer Paul Loasby. "And lately, on my last two trips over to England to hear bands, I noticed that people there seemed a bit bored, in a state of malaise. At the same time, English reporters were starting to come to New York and write very positive reports on the bands here. "England is a lot smaller than the United pers. so people find out about things a lot quicker. Their independent record labels are much better established and more willing to take chances than American companies. "In addition, America is so huge that distributing a record is expensive. Getting records distributed in England isn't that difficult, so British bands rise to prominence much more quickly than American bands. The Fleshtones have been playing in New York since the mid-70s and are just getting over there, but British bands often come over here after they've been together only six or eight months."

Bob Singerman, who acts as booking agent for several of the bands involved, cited the American record industry's recessionary economics as one reason his groups record for English labels. "American companies have been in what amounts to a recording freeze," he said. "They haven't been signing many groups; really, they haven't been listening.

"Meanwhile, English independent labels have been coming over bere to listen to the best bands," Singerman continued. "The Bush Tetras, the Raybeats and several other groups were offered English recording deals a year and a half or two years ago. English independent labels don't have huge staffs and high over-heads. They don't have to make huge profits. They know they can sell this music at home, and I think they're also hoping it will help them break into the American market."

The crowning irony of the situation is the these bands are not truculent punks or eyed avant-gardists. Most are pop bands at dB's, Iour musicians from Winston-Sale. soup, meat and a sort of yellow custard. Baluts are big business throughout the Philippines, but nowhere more than in Pateras Province near Manila, and on the Pasig River on the outskirts of the capital. Here, the soil has exactly the right sand consistency for the snails upon which baint ducks thrive.

Those who rear the eggs don't usually man the ducks themselves. Rather, they gethere the fresh eggs from duck farmers in the region. The eggs are placed carefully in hot, magy, barely lit rooms constructed out of thatch and bamboo — the balutan, or egg hatchery. About 125 eggs are placed in fiber bags, which are put in bamboo baskets in mangers between bags heated rice husk, protecting the eggs and nide ing a sort of nutritive cradle. The temperature is kept at around 107 degrees Fahrenheit.

For the first week, the eggs are turned our every six hours. On the seventh day, the age are candled and bad ones thrown out. Onto 14th day, the eggs are candled again and the ones with germs thrown out. On the hand, 18th day, about 40 percent of the eggs are had on out and boiled for a few seconds and pole to the balut-vendors who crowd around to doors. Hardened balut-eaters wagers on the numbers that can be consumed at a single sitting (or standing, on the street corners). Eating eight or nice is normal from the Guinness book kept records, they could find rumors of up to two dozen consumed after time out in the barios (villages).

No doctor in the Philippines has studied the nutritive content of the balut, but folklore has it that the egg is a terrific aphrodisiac, as wellas a panacea for "fired blood," diseases of the heart, the liver and insomnia — though one quack doctors would actually prescribe the for these diseases. U.S. Index Down for 2d Month

From Agency Dispatches
WASHINGTON — The U.S. index of leading indicators, a broad gauge designed to fore-tell movement in the U.S. economy, fell in January for the sec-ond straight month, the Com-merce Department reported

The two dips followed six consecutive months of improve-ment in the index. Commerce Department analyst Felicks Tamm called the back-to-back decreases "disturbing."

The January decline was 0.4 percent — less than half the revised decline of 0.9 percent in December — leaving the index at 135.8, base 1967.

Eight of the special indica-tors used in the broad index fell in January, while two advanced. The most significant movement appeared to be a 0.39-percent decline in the prices of crude materials used in manufacturing. When the economy is growing, analysts expect these prices to be pushed up by growing demand.

Layoff Rate

The second major factor in January's movement was a 0.27-percent decrease in new orders for goods and materials. These orders were worth $34 billion in December but only $32.57 billion in January.

The rate of layoffs from manufacturing jobs rose from 1.1 percent in December to 1.2 percent in January. But one of the two bright spots in the monthly report was the average workweek in manufacturing jobs, which rose to 40.4 hours from 40.1 hours in December. The other positive movement was an 0.87-percent increase in the country's total liquid assets. Building permits slipped from 99.8 percent of the 1967 level to 99.2 percent. Contracts and orders for plant and equip-ment declined to $13.72 billion in January from $13.85 billion. The other declines were in the rate at which sellers deliver on orders, stock prices and the inflation-adjusted money supply.

A separate economic gauge released by the Commerce Department, the index of coinci dent indicators, rose 0.5 per-cent in January after an 0.4like the leading indicators, which are designed to forecast economic activity, the coinci-dent indicators estimate current the highest deficit since at least

Commercial bank economists said that this figure and a 5 billion mark shortfall in the current account were both worse than the most pessimistic expectations.
The last time West Germany recorded a trade deficit approaching the magnitude of the one announced Friday was in January, 1950, when the deficit was 523 million. West Germany's last trade deficit was in August, 1980 — 133 million marks marks. The nation had a balance of trade surplus of 1.01 billion marks in December, 1980, the statistics showed.

The record high monthly current account shortfall was in July, 1980, when the deficit was 5.21 billion marks. December's shortfall on the current account was 700 million marks. The current account showed a deficit of 2.41 billion marks in January, 1980.

Analysts said that considering the real pressure on the mark against the dollar came only in February, the outlook for this month is worse than for January.

But they pointed out that January is always a special case, and the statistics office noted the decline reflected seasonal fluctua-leads to an increase in oil imports,

The statistics office said irregularities in the transit trade, which posted a deficit of 700 million marks after a surplus of 100 mil-lion marks in December, together with the trade deficit, were the major factors in widening the current account deficit. The transit trade is goods that are imported for processing and re-export.

But analysts were not certain about the causes of the transit trade deficit, because they lack detailed current account figures, which are to be published in March by the Bundesbank. They

Mr. Weidenbaum was promptly disaweidenbaum was promptly disa-towed by then Secretary David Kennedy. With a smile, Mr. Weidenbaum shrugs it off as a youthful indiscretion. "Live and earn," he says today. Since 1975, he has been the di-rector of the Center for the Study of American Business at Washington University in St. Louis. There, he studied deregulation, a subject elose to the heart of all true Reaganites, and therefore destined to be an important part of the council's work in the Weidenbaum gime. The mild-mannered Mr. Weidenbaum was a late-comer to the Reagan team. He did not sign on as head of the regulatory re-form task force until his first choice for the GOP presidential nomination, Joho Connally, dropped out of the 1980 race. His designation as chairman of the council was the last of the key economic appointments made by Mr. Reagan — actually it didn't hap-pen until a couple days after the inauguration. His confirmation by the Senate didn't occur until last Tuesday. The search is still on for the other two council members.

Concerns Not Valid

To some, Mr. Reagan's delay in nominating a council chairman suggested a downgrading of the conneil, as well as a put-down of economists in general. In an interview at the Executive Office Building a few days ago, Mr. Weidenbaum said he thought neither concern has validity.

He has been assured, be said, that the conneil will have a key assistant secretary of treasury in role to the evolution of Reaging the Nixon administration, he even economics and the White Hou has taken pains to give him his visibility. He is comfortable w the Reagan program, which I says is "feasible, useful, and c easily be defended." In fact, this what he has been doing on virtue ly a non-stop basis, along with Of ice of Management and Budg Director David A. Stockman ar Treasury Secretary Donald Rega on radio. TV, in breakfast ar luncheon interviews, and congre sional appearances.

He brushes aside the argumer that the economic scenario put of by the Reagan program is large guesswork. "As a veteran of years' experience in economic for casting," he said, "I have never depended entirely on any computer that a could deal of independent of the pended of th

run. A good deal of judgment is to go into the final results." Addicted to 3x5 cards on wha he has hand-written the key fac and statistics, Mr. Weidenbam appears to be less dynamic an ou side salesman than the super-conf dent Mr. Stockman. He is mor earnest, a bit more professoris and less given to cosmic riletoric.

On the inside, administration sources indicate he is holding in own with the other Reagan stan. He had a voice in the decision the it would be politically unfeasibl. to lower the top tax rate on in-earned income from 70 to 50 per cent all in one year, and successful ly had a hand in curbing academi supply-side language from the president's economic message to

Commodities Climb Now? Equity Multiplies Within Days of Last Deflationary Scare As strident February 13 "credit-squeeze"

As strident February 13 "credit-squeeza" warnings -drove key commodities, hard curries and money instruments into the ground, Caphol Offshore went to press with a report calling classic bottoms in everything from gold and silver to Swiss Francs and Treasury Bills. Within four days of liquidation climases which were completed the following Monday, the Swiss Franc had rebounded by 3½ cents while gold added $30 to lead on inflationary reversal of attitudes. For the futures-morter speculator who trades on minuscula margins, such swings can generate enormous equity enhancement. A future-delivery contract involving 125,000 Swiss Francs can be traded for $2,000 in morgin funds with a 3½-cent gain being worth $4,375 or more than 200 per cert in profits. Some of the affected commodities—capper, contron, lumber and soybeans, for example—were developing the potential for even greater gains over periods of weeks or mouths; and newest Capital Offshore reports are providing updated projections which you should consider if rapid capital enhancement is your goal. Electronic monitoring of managed accounts is oval-able to clients wishing to overcome mailing-time delays in faster-moving markets. GONE CRAZY AND BACK AGAIN

The Rise and Fall of the Rolling Stone Generation

By Robert Sam Anson. Doubleday. 361 pp. $14.95.

Reviewed by John Leonard

A MAGAZINE, in spite of what most writers think, requires an editor, and it often seems to help if the editor is a little crazy, at once a monster of egotism and a clump of twitchy oerve-codings, obsessive and compulsive and anal while at the same time given to mystic spasms. He ocedn't be nice; he doesn't eveo have to be articulate. He merely consults the compass of himself. It is as if the world leaves thumbprints oo his skin. His hruise is oews, and there will always be writers around to report it. Editors as various as H.L. Mencken and Harold Ross were difficult peo-

Jann Wenner, who took $7,500 in 1967 and parlayed it into the $16 miltioo enterprise that is Rolling Stooe today, is oever going to be accused of being a Mencken or a Ross. He wants too much to get his oame in Time magazine and to have lunch with Jacqueline Onassis. It was too important to him that Walter Cronkite show up at the party Rolling Stone gave during the 1976 Democratic National Cooventioo in New York. Great editors are made of sterner stuff.

The Spirit Misread

Nor can he be said to have read the spirit of his generation in several important particulars. Believing as he did that "rock 'o' roll can change the world," he missed the point of the civil rights movement, and was capable of writing after the assassination of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. that King's death "meant little or nothing to the majority of the American people." He also missed the point of feminism, perhaps because the readership of Rolling Stooe is overwhelmingly male; only after a staff sit-in in his office were women permitted to attend editorial confer-

He is, oevertheless, more than just an entrepreneur, the perfect pink child of capitalism triumphant. A good editor lives and dies by his in-stincts and his writers. "I like talented people," Wenner once explained. You might say I collect them." Instinct led him to hire a number of enormously valented people, including Michael Lydon, Joo Landau Greil Marcus, Joe Eszterhas, Grover Lewis and, of course, Hunter S. Thompsoo. He let Carl Bernstein get away and underestimated Timothy Crouse, but then Crouse was also underestimated by a lot of shrewd reporters until they read "The Boys on the Bus."

Many of these talented people moved on and some burned out. No matter; that is the oature of writers. It is worthier, and much more fun, to have hired them at the heginning of their careers, when they were as new as the music

But it must have been a riot during the growing years. Robert Sam Anson, who has done time at Time and New Times and WNET-TV, makes it sound that way in this hreezy, fact-filled and opiniooated book. Return with us now to those thrilling days of esteryear, when Ramparts was in bloom, when Timothy Leary and Ken Kesey and Bill Graham and Emmett Grogan were all in San Francisco. Listen to the Grateful Dead and the Jeffersoo Airplane. Contemplate Woodstock and Altamont. Think, if you can, about Patty Hearst.

Anson seems to have interviewed anybody who was somebody in the Rolling Stooe saga. We learn as much about the business side of the magazine as we do about the office politics and the cocaine-sniffing. Everybody seems to agree that without Wenner, the entire operation would have gone bankrupt.

If there is a fault in Anson's account, it is that he wants Rolling Stooe to stand for all of youth culture. It must be the computer printout of the love tribe, whereas it has been at least as much a stock report on record-company profits. Somehow, the more politically minded of Rolling Stone writers and editors never got through to Wenner. When at last he decided that politics might he important, he turned to Richard N. Goodwin, and it was an expensive

According to Anson, the compla-cency of Rolling Stooe today repre-sents "the failure of a dream." Nonsense. There are still dreamers all over the place. Also according to Anson, "at bottom, the story of Patry Hearst was the story of a generation writ large." Really? Just because Rolling Stone had a scoop on the Symbionese Liberatioo Army? What about Boh Dylan or Muhammad Ali or Lt. Calley? The last two decades have been far more interesting than Patry

So ooe cavils. Enough. If Wenner is something less than a combinadoo of Julien Sorel and Hendersoo the Rain King and Rolling Stone something less than Martin Luther's 95 theses, "Gone Crazy and Back Again" oever-theless entertains as much as it cautions. This is what has become of some of us.

Louis L'Amour Hits New Lode

New York Times Service NEW YORK - Louis L'Amour, the king of Western writers, broke out of the mass market corral at full gal-lop when Bantam Books published his latest oovel, "Comstock Lode" in simultaneous trade paperback and hard-cover editions.

"I've had several hard covers be-fore," said the author during a visit to New York, "but this is my first trade paperback."

About 500,000 copies of 'Comstock Lode" are already in print. L'Amour, said to be one of the most widely read writers in the world, is so prolific that he can't remember whether his latest book is No. 78 or 79. "I do about three a year hy writing practically every day of my life," he said.

Even without the appellate imprimatur, the decision has the potential of dealing a serious psycho-logical setback to women's sports, it was generally agreed by those connected with women's athletics.

"I think the ramifications will be disastrous," said Chuck Guerrier, director of the Women's Law Fund in Cleveland and author of a recent book on Title IX.

"A lot of school boards will read this decision and say, 'Great! Now we don't have to offer anything in women's athletics if we don't want to.' It gives them a legal justification to refuse to be responsive to the needs of women.

Margot Polivy, lawyer for the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, agreed that the decision could have an impact. But she added, "Before it can mean anything significant, it would have to go to an appeals court. If it stands, it's important."

"I'd like to meet that judge and shake his hand," said Jim Kehoe, retiring director of athletics at the University of Maryland and a longtime proponent of the argu-ment that college athletic pro-grams that do not receive federal funds should be free of federal reg-

Polivy said the underlying theory in Joiner's ruling seems to be that if you don't receive direct federal funding, then you're not covered by Title IX." AIAW is currently involved in a battlewith the NCAA for control of women's intercollegiate athletics.

There have been several court cases involving the direct funding issue, Polivy said, but, as yet, no definitive court decision.

In handing down his ruling, Joiner said the original intent of Congress regarding sex discrimination and Title IX of the 1972 Education Act had been misinterpret-ed by the Department of Health and Human Services.

Fighting in the NHL: The Puck Stops Here and Profits Begin

New York Times Service NEW YORK — Sooner or later, the New York Rangers will pre-sumably receive a ruling from John Ziegler, the eminent presi-dent and philosopher of the Na-tional Hockey League, regarding disciplinary action against seven players who took what little law exists in the NHL into their gnarled hands in Detroit last week.

Clomping up into the stands moments after a 7-3 loss, the Ranger posse, led by Nick Fotiu, appeared to be intent on high-sticking several culture-seekers who had been splashing them with here and insults.

The players were hauled up on the carpet Thursday in New York before an NHL official, who then neaded off to report to Ziegler in Montreal. When a similar episode involving several members of the Boston Bruins occurred last season, Ziegler needed 33 days to sort out the evidence before suspending three Bruins for a total of 20 games and fining 19.

 Hockey advertises itself as the fastest game on earth, but Ziegler is seldom in a rush. He's seldom even in his office.

If the Rangers are smart, they will simply promise Ziegler that they will unleash a few players at every road game and send them promoted properly, that guarantee surely should create a sellout wherever the Rangers appear. And judging by Ziegler's recent tribute to the charm of the Philadelphia

Flyers, a sellout is all that counts.

The Flyers are the top draw, at home and on the road, Ziegler proclaimed. "People pay money to see them. Io a business sense, they are a big success throughout the league. If the other 20 teams were as successful, I'd be pleased, regardless of how they achieved such

Socrates of the Sellout

"Regardless of how they achieved such success." Put that at the top of Ziegler's collected works. That belongs even above last year's "I think people who say that violence in the sport is in-creasing couldn't be more wrong." Ziegler obviously is watching a different sport from the one Jerry Buss is watching. Or maybe Zie-gler is merely watching the profit-and-loss statements. Call him the Socrates of the sellout. Ziegler's loyalty to the Flyers' ability to draw people and blood was in response to the recent criti-cism of the Flyers by Buss, the owner of the Los Angeles Kings.

Buss charged that the Flyers' tactics "cheapen the game." He hoped to have a petition signed by enough other NHL owners to force Ziegler to ground the Flyers, who already have set a season record with 2,092 penalty minutes through last weekend's games. The Flyers have now led the league in penalties for 10 consecutive seasons. Paul Holmgren, a right wing, is the individual leader this season with 243 minutes. But the new bullyboy, Glen Cochran, has 121 minutes in only 17 games. "I'll need at least 11 signatures from the other owners," Buss says, "but I've avoided talking to the other owners for now. I'll wait until I make the big push. For now, I'm just trying to find out how they want to play the game."

Ziegler's disciples have jumped ou Buss, saying that he is merely trying to promote the Kings' gate; that he is a Jerry-come-lately to a sport that old-timers believe was nastier two decades ago (it was not) and that he is cruing over the not) and that he is crying over the Kings' inability to beat the Flyers over 27 games (23 losses, four ties) since Oct. 10, 1974. "Hockey is a macho sport," Buss replies. "A crybaby is always thought of as having lost his macho. Some of our owners don't want to lose their macho."

In the two weeks since Buss opened fire on the Flyers' style, he has received dozens of letters from hockey followers in NHL cities and beyood.

"I've been averaging about 15 to-20 letters a day," he says. "They're

Striking Collection Of 'Matchsafes'

New York Times Servee

New YORK — At an antiques show 15 years ago, Carol Barden found a Victorian silver matchsafe embellished with an enamel butterfly. She bought it for $4 and used it, oot with the tiny wax friction matches that the striker was made to store, but with hig wooden malches.

Shortly thereafter she met Stephen W. Brener, and he began buying matchsafes as gifts for her. When they were married in 1964, they owned fewer than 100 of the tiny boxes and they knew very little about them. What they now know, after assembling a collection of 4,289, not only could fill a book, it does — the catalog of "Matchsafes," an exhibition at the Cooper-Hewitt Museum in New York through April 12. Museum in New York through April 12.

The Breners are oow divorced, and since oeither wanted to keep the collection — thought to be the largest and most comprehensive in existence — but both were loath to see it broken up, they donated it to the museum. David McFadden, curator of decorative arts, selected 500 for the show. The generously illustrated catalog by Jerry E. Paterson, a vice president of Sotheby Parke Bernet, is an excellent introduction, covering in detail how manchastes were produced and of what they were made in the decades from the 1850s to the 1920s, when pocket lighters made them obsolete.

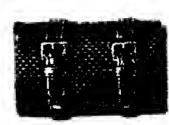

Friction matches were invented in the early 19th century, but were not found in the average pocket until Samuel Jones began selling "lucifers" in his Loodon shoo. The Light House. Soon eager entrepreneurs began to produce an astonishing array of holders and cootainers for friction matches, each equipped with a hinged cover or close-fitting lid and a roughened striking

"We oever knew, when we began, how hig the world of matchsafes was," said Mrs. Brener.

Because so little was known about these containers a decade ago, the Breners were unaware that some had hidden compartments for knives, pencils, coins and other useful objects. Mrs. Brener discovered this by accident one day while cleaning a matchesafe, then she went through the hundreds that they owned and found 27 others so equipped. "I fell like Nancy Drew knocking on the wall to find the hidden staircase," she said.

Here is a selection of striking examples from the show.

A federal district court judge in Manhattan has directed that George Harrison, a former Beatle, pay 5587,000 for having "subconsciously" plagiarized a melody by John Mack in Harrison's 1971 hit "My Sweet Lord." A decision in the civil action against Harrison was reached in 1976 by Judge Richard Owen, who originally set damages at $1.6 million. The judge later undertook a "discovery" process to lower the damages. The judge state of the damages of $2.8 million. judge, who composes operas as a hobby, ruled that Harrison copied the melody of "He's So Fine," written by Mack in 1963, when he composed "My Sweet Lord," but "I do not believe he did so deliberately." In his British will, dated Nov. 12, 1979, and published in London, Lennon left half his estate to his wife, Yoko Ono, and the remainder to be held in a trust fund. Details of the trust fund were not disclosed, but Len-non's 18-year-old son Julian by his first wife, Cynthia, was believed to be the main beneficiary of the rock star's British estate. Lennon's British estate is only a small fraction of the fortune. Estimates have put it as high as $275 million, most of it abroad. However, Lennon's U.S. will, published last December, val-ued his U.S. estate at $30 million. . . .

Judith Somogi has been appointed "first conductor" of the Frankfurt Opera, beginning with the 1982-3 season. Miss Somogi, who was born in Brooklyn about 40 years ago (she is reticent about her age), has been conducting at the New York City Opera since 1974. In Frankfurt there are two first conductors and each is expected to conduct from 40 to 60 performances a season. Miss Somogi's Frankfurt offer came after a highly successful guest performance there of "Madame Butterfly" Jan. 18.
